I. INTRODUCTION

In its notice of public hearing dated December 23, 1969, the Commission indicated its intention to consider the renewal of network licences at the present hearing. At the same time in an accompanying press release it indicated its wish to have reports from the networks on their present operations and to hear the views and plans of the network operators for the improvement of the national broadcasting system during the next few years.

We have taken note of these wishes in preparing the present brief and its supporting documents. We have noted also the view expressed by the Commission early in December, and cited in the December 23 release, that the Canadian broadcasting system "must increase the extension of services which the population requires, and improve the quality and variety of these services".

This brief will deal with the scope and operations of CBC network broadcasting, with some of the principal problems and pressures involved in these wide-ranging operations and with some possible future developments. In its final part we consider certain implications for the Corporation of the proposed licensing process. The brief will be supplemented by factual information on the structure and extent of the various CBC networks and on their program output.

In our appearance before the Commission we will be pleased to deal in more detail with any of the matters touched on in the brief or its appendices. The Commission already has in its possession, incidentally, extensive information on the financial side of our operations: analyses of costs, revenues, etc.

A minor point which should be mentioned at the outset is that the Commission's hearing notice and subsequent correspondence speaks of the "renewal" of licences for CBC networks. Actually, up to this point CBC networks have never had licences, so that what we are concerned with here is the initial issuance of licences for the networks in question.

II. CBC NETWORKS - A GENERAL VIEW

1. "Services" and "Networks"

The preparation of a brief in a situation which involves a review of the current achievement and future prospects of five broadcasting networks - two television and three radio, two French and three English - involves formidable problems of selection. The physical scope of the various networks and the range and volume of their output could easily result in an indigestible mass of information. By and large, therefore, we have confined statistical data, tables, etc., to appendices and restricted the brief to an overall survey of our networks and of their problems and prospects.

It is easy to think of the CBC as being coextensive with the television or radio service in English or French that one ordinarily receives and to forget that the Corporation provides, not one or two broadcasting services, but six: five domestic and one international. Thus, we have, domestically, an English television service, a French television service, an English AM radio service, a French AM radio service, and an English FM radio service (plus a single French FM station).

The description of these as five services, rather than five networks is deliberate. The CBC network pattern is much more complicated than it appears. Nor is the complexity the result of negligence on the Corporation's part; it is a response to the broadcasting needs of Canadians as they have become evident over the years and as the CBC has tried to meet them. Our networks (FM excepted) are not monolithic; they subdivide and recombine constantly in response to the changing demands of geography, of time zones and of audience groupings. A reasonably complete list of CBC networks would be as follows:

- (1) National television network (French)
- (2) Maritimes regional television network (French)
- (3) National television network (English)
- (4) Newfoundland regional television network (English)
- (5) Maritimes regional television network (English)
- (6) Central (Ont. & Que.) regional television network (English)
- (7) Prairie* regional television network (English)
- (8) British Columbia regional television network (English)
- (9) National AM radio network (French)
- (10) Maritimes regional AM radio network (French)
- (11) Ontario regional AM radio network (French)
- (12) National AM radio network (English)
- (13) Newfoundland regional AM radio network (English)
- (14) Maritimes regional AM radio network (English)
- (15) Central (Ontario) regional AM radio network (English)
- (16) Prairie* regional AM radio network (English)
- (17) British Columbia regional AM radio network (English)
- (18) Northern Service "Mackenzie" regional AM radio network (English)
- (19) Northern Service "Yukon" regional AM radio network (English)
- (20) Northern Service "Ungava" regional AM radio network (English)
- (21) FM (tri-city) radio network (English)

* The Prairie regional network occasionally subdivides, in both TV and radio, into its provincial components.

 The Quebec AM network is, in effect, the national network.

The Northern Service, though we have grouped it here with the rest of our English AM service and though it takes much of its programming from that service, has many claims to be considered separately as a sixth domestic service of the CBC. We will have more to say later in the brief about the special character of the Northern Service.

The member stations of all the 21 networks enumerated above are listed in Appendix A.

2. The CBC's Mandate

While the CBC does not have licences for its networks at present, it does not entirely lack guidance for them. Section 2 of the 1968 Broadcasting Act imposes very definite obligations on the Corporation, obligations which, taken together, have come to be known as our mandate. It is against this mandate, supplemented where applicable by the regulations of the Commission, that we have consistently tried to measure our performance and it is this standard which we apply to ourselves in connection with the Commission's current hearings.

The Commission is familiar with our mandate and we do not want to belabor the subject here. However, since, as we have said, it is our basic point of reference, we believe that a check of the Corporation's performance against the specifications of the mandate would facilitate the Commission's present task. We cite here, then the six elements of the mandate and comment very briefly on each.

- (a) The national broadcasting service should be basically Canadian in content and character.

The volume of Canadian production, the use of Canadian resources and the concentration on subjects of Canadian interest are, we believe, prima facie evidence that the service provided by the CBC, in both television and radio and in both official languages, is predominantly Canadian in content and character. The program data in the appendices to the brief, particularly Appendix B, supports this claim, as do the station logs and other information filed from time to time with the Commission.

- (b) The service provided should be balanced, should cover the whole range of programming and should serve all kinds of people.

Once again we refer to Appendix B which shows by subject categories the variety and balance of CBC programming in all its services. The same information can, of course, be derived from our station logs.

- (c) The service provided by the Corporation should be extended to all parts of Canada as public funds become available.

The reach of the national service, in terms of population covered, is dealt with fully in Appendix C.

The CBC's view of its obligation to extend the national service to as many Canadians as possible was stated in a brief filed with this Commission in November, 1968. At that time we said that we considered the obligation to be "of vital importance" and that "it ranks second only to the obligation to create and maintain the program service itself".

- (d) The national service should be in both official languages.

The existence of national television and radio services in both languages speaks for itself. The significance of this, in terms of the numbers of each official language group reached, is brought out in Appendix D.

- (e) The Service should serve the special needs of geographic regions and contribute actively to the flow and exchange of regional information and entertainment.

Our brief has already referred to the score of different network groupings that exist in CBC television and radio. These networks and the special programming they carry have come into being to meet special regional needs, both geographic and socio-cultural. We will have something to say about the flow and exchange of regional information and entertainment in our specific comments on the networks in Parts III and IV of the brief.

- (f) The service should contribute to the development of national unity and provide for a continuing expression of Canadian identity.

A considered statement on this subject will be found at pp. 6-8 of Volume II of this submission. Also to be noted in this connection is a selection of programs broadcast in our French and English services over the last five or six years related to national unity and Canadian identity. This selection is contained in Volume III of this submission.

Subsection (d) of Section 2 of the Broadcasting Act sets certain standards for the programming provided by the Canadian broadcasting system as a whole and as such must be included in the CBC's mandate. The subsection states that the programming provided should:

- be varied and comprehensive,
- provide reasonable, balanced opportunity for the expression of differing views on matters of public concern,
- be of high standard,
- use predominantly Canadian creative and other resources.

We believe that the programming provided by CBC networks meets these requirements. Our programs speak for themselves but, as well, we have brought together in the documents supporting this brief a great deal of program information which supports our belief.

3. The CBC's Program Philosophy

The CBC has recently had occasion to prepare a statement expressing its program philosophy in considerable detail. We believe that what we said in that statement is also relevant to the subject of this hearing. It will be found in Volume II of this submission; the sections entitled "The Socio-Cultural Background" (pp. 17-26) and "Some Ethical Questions" (pp.27-32) are particularly relevant.

4. The Affiliate Contribution

Privately-owned affiliated stations are an integral part of all the Corporation's national networks and play an essential role in the distribution of the national service in areas where the CBC does not have its own transmission facilities.

The terms and conditions of affiliation described in the current affiliation agreements have evolved through the years through discussion and negotiation between the affiliates and the CBC. The process is still continuing. The affiliation agreements are renewable every two years and any amendments to them are referred to the joint (CBC/affiliate) Network Advisory Committee (radio or television) for study. These Committees usually meet semi-annually to discuss schedules and mutual problems involved in network operations. In addition to these Advisory Committees there are continuing joint committees on network rate setting. Ad hoc committees are established from time to time to review network option or reserved time or other aspects of the network-affiliate relationship.

One of the main features of each network affiliation agreement is the definition of the amount of CBC service to be carried by the affiliate. This amount is referred to in radio as reserved time and in television as network option time and every effort is made to provide a reasonable balance of program fare within these amounts in conformity with the Corporation's mandate under the Broadcasting Act. At the present time, affiliated stations schedule the following amounts of network service weekly on the average:

French Television Network	- 79:45 hours (44:15 hours option time)
English Television Network	- 53:35 hours (41:20 hours option time)
English Radio Network	- 30:00 hours (24:55 hours reserved time)
French Radio Network	- 42:52 hours (23:10 hours reserved time)

* The figures in brackets represent the minimum amount of network service which the affiliate is required to carry.

These amounts of service constitute the CBC national service element on some 34 English network television affiliates who operate additionally 119 rebroadcasting stations; on 9 French network television affiliates who operate additionally 33 rebroadcasting stations; on 60 English radio network affiliates and on 34 French radio network affiliates. Taken together there are some 289 privately-owned transmitters that distribute part of the Corporation's program output (more in television than in radio) as a result of the cooperation of private licensees with the Corporation.

This participation by private broadcasters in achieving the purposes of the Act is an important service to the public. In radio, for example, of the average audience of 201,500 people listening to the French radio network variety program, LES JOYEUX TROUBADOURS, 113,000 are listening to our affiliates. The audience of 452,000 for the English radio network program, SUNDAY MORNING MAGAZINE, includes 273,000 people who listen to it through our English affiliated stations. Comparable examples in television show that MOI ET L'AUTRE which has a total audience of 2,209,000 obtains 813,900 of this audience through our nine French television network affiliates. FRONT PAGE CHALLENGE has a total weekly audience of 3,333,000 people, 1,579,000 of whom are viewers to affiliated stations of the English television network.

All this is of obvious importance to the Corporation in its work. But the advantages are not all one way; the affiliate also benefits by receiving without charge an important block of programming from network resources and at public expense.

The radio affiliates have had criticisms and suggestions to make concerning the program service provided them by the Corporation. At the Corporation's request the affiliate members of the English Radio Network Advisory Committee have recently submitted a brief to a radio study group which has been set up within the CBC to examine the Corporation's future radio role.

On the television side the impact of CATV development in affiliate areas is being closely watched. Assessment of the effects of CATV systems suggests that these systems are likely to pose serious problems for the smaller affiliates as broadcast enterprises. The audience fragmentation that CATV brings, which perhaps can be sustained by affiliates in the larger markets because the affiliate's residual audience continues to render him economically viable, could render the smaller stations uneconomical from an advertising point of view.

We are cognizant and appreciative of the role played by private affiliates in assisting the Corporation to discharge the responsibility to the people of Canada which has been laid upon it by Parliament. The CBC-affiliate relationship poses difficulties from time to time for both parties. However, with the spirit of cooperation that has marked the relationship up to now the difficulties can continue to be met and overcome. Certainly we see a continuing role for the affiliate in the distribution of the national service.

5. Organization Changes

A brief description of current organizational changes in the Corporation may be helpful to the Commission. Until the last year or so the CBC was organized on a geographical basis in a number of Divisions and Regions. There was a Toronto and Ontario Division and a Montreal and Quebec Division, plus a Newfoundland Region, a Maritimes Region, a Prairie Region, a British Columbia Region and a Northern Service (concerned principally with the Territories). In addition to these, there was the International Service. The heads of these various Regions and Services reported to Head Office at Ottawa.

Last year the Corporation announced its decision to move from an organization based on geography to one based on language and this change is currently being implemented. Under this organization plan the Corporation will have an English Services Division, a French Services Division and an External Services Division.

All domestic French-language operations of the Corporation, irrespective of location, will be the responsibility of the French Services Vice-President, at Montreal, and all domestic English-language operations will be the responsibility of the English Services Vice-President, at Toronto. All our external operations, including the International Service, will be the responsibility of the Director-General of External Services. These three officers will report to the Executive Vice-President at Head Office.

The change is a complicated one involving a variety of new reporting relationships. It is already under way but, because of its complexity, we do not expect it to be complete until sometime next year.

6. Extension of Coverage

Before going on to consider the aspects of our television and radio networks that call for particular comment, it should be recalled that statistics on the coverage of each of the five networks listed in the Commission's notice of public hearing are contained in Appendices C and D.

As the Commission is aware, extension of coverage to presently unserved areas is a matter of continuing study by the Corporation. The criteria which govern CBC coverage extension and the factors, particularly that of providing program service to new stations, which we must take into account in our planning, are described at length in the briefs which we submitted to the Commission in the fall of 1968 in connection with the hearings on alternative television service. Those briefs included specific short-term coverage plans for all the provinces. In addition, we supplied to the Commission in confidence at the end of 1969 a list of all the locations and population groupings included in our five-year capital plan for television and radio.

7. Technological Developments

(a) Community Antenna Television (CATV)

The growth of CATV could have important effects on our coverage policy. Heretofore CBC coverage extension has been predicated on the use of broadcasting facilities exclusively, with no reference to the possible role of CATV. The policy could be altered in two ways. One would be by the use of CATV systems, instead of broadcast transmitters, to carry direct program feeds from CBC production centres by cable to CATV subscribers. This might be technically desirable in a big city where interference factors make such a system of distribution preferable or supplementary to off-air reception. At present, however, legal and other problems prohibit the Corporation from feeding CATV systems by direct head-end connection. If these legal obstacles were overcome (they include problems of copyright and union contracts), then the CBC would have to decide if in some cases Canadians could be better served by transmission through cable systems than by the conventional transmitters now in use or by a combination of the two.

The second application of CATV to the CBC coverage situation might be in a smaller, relatively remote community which had no conventional television but was served by a CATV system. If a large part of the community subscribed to CATV and was already receiving CBC off-air service through this system, the need to establish a CBC transmitter to serve the area might be obviated, with a consequent diversion of coverage funds to some other place where they were more urgently needed. The use of CATV in this way to achieve the overall coverage objective which the Act imposes on the CBC obviously raises problems of equity as between taxpayers but they are probably not insoluble.

The CBC will be anxious to assess the results of the far-reaching studies being conducted by the Telecommission established last fall by the Department of Communications and the implications of these for the national broadcasting service.

An important fact in the overall coverage picture is that there will continue to be significant numbers of Canadians which private broadcasters, and also CATV systems, may not find it economically feasible to serve. The Corporation will continue, for the foreseeable future, to serve such Canadians through conventional transmitters. The role of conventional transmitters as we now know them, however, may be diminished over the intermediate and long term not only by the burgeoning cable systems but also by the development of a direct-to-receiver broadcasting satellite.

(b) Communications Satellites

The influence of communications satellites in the 1960s was felt mainly in the international area when they were able to link television organizations on different continents together to form a world network whereby most viewers could see, as it occurred, an event such as the flight of Apollo XI. In the 1970s the development and design of communications satellites and their supporting systems will become more efficient and more specialized.

The development of a satellite system for Canada is an example of this specialized development. The Canadian six-channel satellite now being worked on could provide three television channels to the CBC for distribution of French and English television network programs to all parts of Canada, particularly to remote and northern regions. Those centres in these regions which already receive a delayed television service on videotape recordings for four hours a day through our Frontier Coverage Package stations would, in many cases, acquire an earth station through which live TV would be received and retransmitted to the local community. The Canadian satellite would be used to distribute CBC network service in southern Canada, also, but this would be a change in the method of delivery only and would not be evident to viewers except as it might permit extension of French television network service to areas not now receiving it.

In summary, the contribution of satellites to CBC television in the 1970s would be to facilitate distribution of the Corporation's English and French network services to remote and northern regions and to replace some of the present terrestrial microwave system in the south. Distribution of broadcast radio by satellite is also a possibility for the 1970s.

8. The CBC and Educational Broadcasting

The Commission has recently issued a licence to the CBC for Channel 19, Toronto, for educational broadcasting, with the transmitter to be operated by the Corporation and the programming to be supplied by the Department of Education of the Province of Ontario. In Alberta the CBC is making time available on its new French-language transmitter, CBXFT, for the provision of educational broadcasting in the Edmonton area. It is well known that a significant part of the Corporation's overall aims and objectives in all media and in both official languages is its work in the area of formal educational programming, carried out in cooperation with established educational authorities. The role it plays in this area is both complementary and supplementary to that of the formal educational agencies. Additionally, through activities in the fields of information and culture the CBC plays an indirect educational role.

The Corporation's formal educational programming is designed to enrich the lives of Canadians in many regions of the country and at many levels of academic and non-academic involvement. In association with local school boards, colleges and universities, provincial education departments and national organizations such as teachers' federations and adult education associations, there is programming which is planned, produced and distributed to complement the existing educational activities of these various institutions.

As well, the Corporation is of the opinion that it is desirable to combine both enlightenment and entertainment in many of the programs in its schedules. This is particularly true of our arts and science programming on both radio and television designed for general audiences, and of our several series intended for pre-school children and older children in their out-of-school viewing and listening.

III. TELEVISION NETWORKS

A. The English TV Network

1. The Character of the Schedule

The schedule of the English television network for a week in February 1970 is attached as Appendix E. Appendix B contains the breakdown of this schedule by program category.

During a typical week this winter (February 15-21) the English television network presented a total of 69½ hours of programs. Out of this 41:20 hours was carried by the full network, including all affiliates, as a reserved time package. In addition, on the average, affiliates carried 12:15 hours of optional programming. The remaining hours were carried only by CBC-owned stations.

Of the 69½ hours total for the week 39:45 hours (57.4%) was purely Canadian. This has been the approximate level of Canadian content in the English network schedule for some years. However, the situation is less satisfactory than this figure would indicate. The Canadian content is not distributed evenly through the schedule, dropping during the prime-time hours (7:30 to 11:00 p.m.) to 49%.

The reason for this is well-known: the CBC's need for commercial revenue to meet the cost of its operations combines with the understandable desire of sponsors to be associated with programs of wide audience appeal at times of maximum audience availability to place a high priority on imported entertainment programs, for the most part from the United States. The result has been twofold: the over-commercialization and the over-Americanization of the prime-time schedule. To say this is to be neither anti-commercial nor anti-American; it is merely to recognize that economic pressures have resulted in a situation which is not entirely compatible with the CBC's mandate.

The Corporation's Board of Directors has recognized the need to correct the situation and some time ago asked that the possibility of increasing Canadian content in prime time be studied. This resulted in a decision by the Corporation, announced last September, to increase the amount of Canadian content in prime time by one and a half hours weekly, commencing with the 1970-71 schedule. The increased Canadian content would, of course, be at the expense of American content.

A change of this kind is much more difficult than it sounds. The difficulty is fundamentally economic: the network's operating budget has to adjust not only to the cost of the new Canadian production (which may or may not gain sponsors) but to the loss of commercial revenue from the American programs which are being displaced.

The English TV network, then, is committed to this move. Moreover, it does not look on this as a final step. Our long-range objective is to build a further increment of Canadian programming into the prime-time schedule each year for the next few years, not only because CRTC regulations may require it but because this is the kind of schedule the CBC should have.

Reference has been made to the "commercialization" of the schedule. The Corporation's Board of Directors took note of this situation and last December initiated a comprehensive study of the extent to which current CBC commercial practices (frequency and placements of announcements, etc.) were in conflict with the Corporation's program standards and objectives.

This study is still in progress.

2. Regional Contributions

The Act says that the national broadcasting service should contribute "to the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment". It is the Corporation's intention that its national network schedules (both English and French) should contribute increasingly to this end. The centripetal-centrifugal pull (network centre versus regions) has been a fact of CBC life almost from the beginning. The logistics and economics of network television being what they are, the tendency has been for the centralizing pressure to prevail. To some extent this is inevitable and in every country the greatest concentration of broadcasting resources and output is to be found at the metropolitan centre(s).

A special effort is required, therefore, to ensure that in our schedules regional needs are not lost sight of and, specifically, that this requirement of the Act is met. The current reorganization of the Corporation's network management structure mentioned above should contribute to this end. Senior regional officers will now be directly responsible to the network Vice-President and, jointly and severally, will be expected to reflect adequately in the process of network schedule planning the needs and potential contributions of their respective regions.

The foregoing is not intended to suggest that regional contributions are not now reflected in the English TV network schedule, but merely to indicate the increased emphasis which will be given to this in future. For the record, 18% of the current weekly total of English TV network programming originates in centres other than Toronto.

It is perhaps worth mentioning here that this live network exchange is currently supplemented by a substantial exchange of recorded television programs among CBC stations and some of our affiliates. A catalogue of approximately 1200 titles has been developed, all of them being Canadian programs originally produced at CBC regional centres for local or regional release. The supplementary distribution these programs are getting on film or videotape constitutes, we think, a substantial contribution "to the flow and exchange of cultural and regional information and entertainment". An index of the scope of this project is the fact that in the fiscal year 1969-70 over 3000 plays of programs were achieved through this exchange system. (A "play" is the broadcast of one program on one station.)

It must be added that this system of exchange, valuable though it is, is not envisaged as a permanent answer to the need for increased inter-regional exchange. We foresee that, over the long term, this supplement to regular network programming will be increasingly integrated into the regular pattern of television network programming.

3. Regional Programming

Each region of the television network service produces a variety of programming to meet regional needs. The regions in question are as follows: Newfoundland, Maritimes, Ontario, Central (Manitoba), Prairie (Alberta) and Pacific (British Columbia).

A breakdown by program category of the program service provided in each of these six regions is given in Appendices F, G, H, I, J and K. In each case the breakdown is supported by a list of the regional programs involved.

B. The French TV Network

1. The Character of the Schedule

The schedule of the French television network for a week in February 1970 is attached as Appendix L. In addition, Appendix B contains the breakdown of this schedule by program category.

During a typical week this winter (February 15-21) the French television network presented a total of 111 hours of programs. Out of this 44:15 hours was carried by the full network, including all affiliates, as a reserved time package. In addition, on the average, affiliates carried 35:30 hours of optional programming. The remaining hours were carried only by CBC-owned stations.

Of the 111 hours total for the week 59:46 hours (53.8%) was purely Canadian. This has been the approximate level of Canadian content in the French network schedule for some years. It will be noted that the total network hours and Canadian hours are substantially higher on the French network than on the English. There are two reasons for this. One is that the French network has a comparatively small pool of ready-made French-language programs to draw on and, as a result, must produce much more from its own resources. The other is that CBFT Montreal (the key station of the French network) has substantially less purely local time at its disposal than does CBFT (the key station of the English network).

Heretofore all the output of CBFT has gone to at least one other station on the network (e.g., CBAFT Moncton), with the result that the total of French network hours is correspondingly inflated. This is a reflection of the fact that CBC stations on the English network have had the production resources to make use of "non-network" periods whereas CBC-owned French stations have not.

Despite the restraints of competition and the limitations of budgets the French television network has succeeded in producing a substantial majority of programs reflecting the linguistic and cultural character of French-speaking Canadians. Notwithstanding the fact that part of the schedule is of foreign origin it can fairly be said that the attention and the efforts of our French network staff are centred principally on the reality of this country. In fact, the inventiveness and the effort applied to Canadian programs represents a great deal more of the overall energies expended by our network production staff than the 54% of "pure" Canadian programming shown in our analysis would indicate. We would go further and say that the generally recognized quality of the French network's output plays a correspondingly important part in the benefit that viewers get from the service.

A word of warning should be added. While the French network will continue to use all its ingenuity to develop more Canadian production we believe that, having in mind the size of the pool on which the network must draw for talent resources of all sorts, the saturation point under present conditions is not far away.

2. Development of the Network

The development of the French network has been quite different from that of the English and the difference is rooted in the population distribution of the corresponding language groups. Until recently the French network has been very largely a Quebec-based network. The stations that have come into being outside Quebec have (with the exception of the CBC-owned stations at Ottawa, Winnipeg and, now, Moncton and Edmonton) been rebroadcasting; stations only, carrying the complete output of CBFT, Montreal. (The same considerations apply, though with less force, to a comparison of the French and English radio networks.)

The background of this situation and the place which its solution has among CBC priorities was discussed at length in our 1968 briefs to the Commission on the subject of alternative television service. There have been developments since then of which the Commission is aware (at Moncton and Edmonton - and in radio at Windsor) and there will be further developments as the Seventies proceed. The Canadian satellite when it goes into operation should be of particular importance to the expansion of our French television service since it can provide the network distribution facilities which, on the basis of microwave cost, have up to now been the great obstacle to that expansion.

One of the long-term consequences of the expansion of the network will be the development of regional production facilities, albeit on a modest scale, outside Quebec. The studios soon to be opened in Moncton are a step in this direction. This development will ultimately result in a wider geographic reflection of the Canadian scene on the French network and a better service to the million French-speaking Canadians who live outside Quebec. The current presence of fulltime correspondents of our French News Service at Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto and Moncton, as well as at Montreal, Quebec and Ottawa, is a move directed to this end.

IV. RADIO NETWORKS

1. The AM Networks

The composition and coverage of our radio networks have been referred to in Part II of the brief and detailed information on each network's structure and coverage is contained in Appendices A, C and D. The schedules of the English and French radio networks are contained in Appendices M and S.

The first thing to be observed about the CBC AM networks is their markedly Canadian character; they have a high level of Canadian content. Secondly, their standard of programming is high; by any reasonable standard CBC radio is quality radio.

The radio networks differ from television in the kind of audience support they generate. The CBC radio audience, by and large, believes in and supports CBC radio as a whole, whereas it is probably true to say that the television audience is far more general in nature. In other words, our radio listeners form a "hard-core" audience particularly characterized by its loyalty. The relative absence of commercialism is another way in which our radio networks differ from our television ones.

Worth noting also is the fact that our French radio network is far more extensive in physical scope than its television counterpart. CBC-owned or affiliated stations are to be found in every province except Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island and the network connection extends from Cape Breton Island to Vancouver. While it still has serious coverage gaps, it can reasonably claim to be a "national" network. Moreover, it can call upon staff and production facilities at half a dozen centres outside Quebec for program material, particularly in the area of information programming.

The most obvious problem of our radio networks and the one of greatest concern to the Corporation is the small size of their audiences, particularly that of the English network. We welcome and respect the loyal audience we have but we want it to be larger. Changed listening habits on the part of the public generally, and of young people particularly, face CBC radio with a serious challenge. The pattern of broadcasting now practically universal among our radio affiliates is increasingly at variance with many of the program patterns and habits that characterize CBC radio. Obviously, this constitutes a further challenge.

All this is not to suggest that CBC radio has been static (no pun intended!). There have been many fresh and inventive changes in our radio programming on both English and French networks. Such programs as CROSS-COUNTRY CHECKUP, AS IT HAPPENS, RADIO FREE FRIDAY and INDIAN MAGAZINE on the English network and PRESENT À L'ÉCOUTE, SUR TOUTES LES SCENES, CARNET DES ARTS and UN INSTANT on the French network are evidence of this. They suggest that CBC radio is searching for and to a degree discovering the combination of contemporary relevance and program quality which the national broadcasting service wants to provide.

In pursuit of this goal the Corporation has recently initiated a major internal study of its radio operations in both languages. The study, a wide-ranging one, commenced in October 1969. It is too early yet to say definitely what the outcome of the study will be, but there is already reason to believe it will result in important and fruitful changes in the pattern of CBC radio networking. We expect that the findings and recommendations of the study will be presented to our Board of Directors later this spring.

2. Regional Contributions

Regional (as distinct from purely local) programming is much more highly developed in CBC radio than in CBC television. The strength of regional programming in radio is attributable to a program pattern of long standing deriving from (a) the relatively low cost of radio network facilities and (b) the fact that radio has more CBC (and affiliated) outlets in each region than television has. This strength is reflected in the amount of programming of regional origin (i.e., other than from the Toronto and Montreal network centres) in the national radio network schedules, though, as might be expected, the situation is more pronounced in English than in French.

It is probably fair to say, therefore, that because of their relatively low cost our radio networks contribute more actively to the "flow and exchange of regional information and entertainment" than do our television networks.

As stated at the beginning of our brief, the CBC English radio service has a variety of regional components. The programming of these regional networks (Newfoundland, Maritimes, Ontario, Prairie and British Columbia) is summarized in Appendices N, O, P, Q and R.

3. The Northern Service

The CBC's Northern radio service, while basically part of the national AM networks, has a distinctive character which calls for separate comment.

It broadcasts English and French national radio network programming throughout the Yukon and Northwest Territories and the northern part of all provinces except the Maritimes to about 80,000 people (including 13,000 Eskimos and about 20,000 Indians and Metis) across six time-zones. To do this it uses 36 medium wave radio stations (including 30 low power relay transmitters) and one shortwave station at Sackville, whose facilities it shares with the International Service and Armed Forces Service.

All Northern Service radio stations, except CFFB Frobisher Bay on Baffin Island, receive the service of the national radio network from the South via leased telecommunications circuits. Frobisher Bay gets taped programs, shipped by air from Montreal, but relies for its news, sports and other topical programming upon off-air pickup of Northern shortwave transmissions from Sackville.

The shortwave service provides 8½ hours daily of high-frequency broadcasting to the High Arctic and Arctic Quebec. This is made up of programming taken from the English and French networks (70%) and programming specially produced by Northern Service at Montreal, with contributions from Northern stations in English, the three main Eskimo dialects, and French (30%). The latter programming includes Eskimo dramas and CBC's longest-lived radio program, NORTHERN MESSENGER, with messages in English, French, and Eskimo.

About 80% of Northern residents can receive one or other of the Northern Service's six manned stations and 30 LPRTs. The remainder of the population must rely on the shortwave service. The Northern Service stations are grouped as follows:

- "Yukon Area Network" - a manned station at Whitehorse as program centre with 12 connected LPRTs and 1063 miles of network linkage.
- "Mackenzie Area Network" - a manned station at Yellowknife with 12 connected LPRTs and 1336 miles of network linkage.
- "Ungava (Northern Quebec and Labrador) Area Network" - a manned station at Happy Valley (near Goose Bay) with six connected LPRTs and 412 miles of network linkage.

The Area-Networks system was devised by Northern Service to serve small-population areas, many of them mainly Indian, Metis, or Eskimo, in which communities are scattered and isolated. The manned station of each "network" acts as mother station to the connected LPRTs. Its great advantage is its ability to provide program service to meet local and area needs in native languages, as well as English, in a way that helps develop area-community feeling among people living in isolated settlements but within fairly homogeneous socio-economic geographic areas.

Local service is provided by a system under which the area program-centre organizes local correspondents or "stringers" at LPRT localities who send local information to the centre by mail, telephone, and telegraph for broadcast in area-network programs. Basic area-network programming includes frequent weather, road-condition and flying-condition reports, as well as fire, flood and storm warnings. These are vital during freeze-up, break-up, high-wind and white-out weather conditions. The area networks also carry national network programs and special programs produced by the Northern Service production centre in Montreal.

Of increasing importance are community-action programs broadcast in co-operation with the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada. These programs are based on some of the old Farm Radio Forum and Citizens' Forum feedback techniques, but with the added flexibility of portable tape-recording of comments and incoming telephone calls.

The Northern Service broadcasts approximately 38-3/4 hours weekly in Indian and Eskimo languages broken down as follows:

Northern Shortwave Service	8½ hours	Eskimo
Station CFFB Frobisher Bay	18 hours	Eskimo

Station CFYK Yellowknife and Mackenzie Network	5½ hours	Indian and Eskimo
Station CHFC Fort Churchill	4½ hours	Indian and Eskimo
Station CHAK Inuvik	2½ hours	Indian and Eskimo

The list of Northern Service stations is included in Appendix A. A sample list of Northern Service programs, including programs in Eskimo and Indian languages, is attached as Appendix V.

4. Low Power Relay Transmitters (LPRTs)

The CBC now operates 222 LPRTs (178 in English and 44 in French) to bring network radio service to remote areas where topographic or other conditions prevent normal reception and where regular-power stations are not needed to cover the small population groupings involved. As their name implies they are network-fed and usually they carry the program output of the principal CBC station in their region.

Obviously the program fare, particularly the local programming, originated by a metropolitan radio station is not always suited to the needs and interests of rural audiences in isolated locations. This is particularly true of the 38 LPRTs in Northern Ontario which receive their program service from CBL Toronto. With this situation in mind we have been developing over the last year or so a limited amount of separate service specifically directed to this regional network of LPRTs.

The service, which now amounts to over an hour a day, is based on the concept that the area has a need for continuing communication and relevant information. The region's shared experience and needs are an argument for special programming tailored to regional interests.

Following is a list of the special program service currently provided to this LPRT network. During the summer months (May to September) it is supplemented by an additional two hours weekly on Saturday afternoon.

- "On Your Way" - 8:20-8:35 a.m.

Special weather reports, road conditions and public service announcements with music for seasoning.

- "Sounds Around Us" - 12:02-12:10 p.m.

A midmorning northern weather forecast followed by band, folk and western music. The program replaces Metro News.

- "Of Interest to You" - 4:10-4:15 p.m.

In this short period we provide the latest available information on the forest fire situation from April to October. From October to April we provide service information about outdoor activities; e.g., snow conditions, ice fishing and winter tourist attractions.

- "Northern Ontario Roundup" - 5:30-6:00 p.m.

Includes regional news, the latest northern weather from Northwestern Quebec to the Manitoba border, a concise Department of Highways road report, the stock market summary on mines, paper companies and related industries, and public service announcements.

- "The Leon Mangoff Show" - 6:30-7:00 p.m., Monday and Tuesday

Our host comments on local and regional events that come to light through the editors of the community weekly newspapers and weekly sheets. The program is a magazine format with music.

- "Communiqué" - 6:30-7:00 p.m., Thursday

Brings to northern listeners news about decisions of concern to them that are made at Queens Park. Provincial Ministers and Deputy Ministers are questioned about the work of the Ontario Government.

- "Revolutions" - 6:30-7:00 p.m., Friday

A feature which tries to bring into focus the interests and aspirations of young people in Northern Ontario.

The programs listed above are one aspect of our effort to bring significant radio to this particular region. Another aspect is personal contact with the people. This has been achieved through tours and visits to their various celebrations and carnivals by LPRT programming staff and a radio mobile unit.

5. The FM Network

When we survey the challenges and opportunities for network broadcasting in the Seventies we are inevitably faced with the need to consider further network resources. Our present FM network tends to reflect a very serious type of program fare. There is a need, of course, for delivering good music through the highest quality transmission. But we do not see FM as an elitist kind of radio; rather we feel that if possible it should be used to serve a wider audience with the things it does best. At present we have only five FM stations in the English service. Only three of these have stereo capability (Vancouver, Winnipeg and Ottawa) and only three are linked by network connection (Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa).

Given sufficient resources, it is possible to see FM as a second CBC radio service in the future, capable of enabling us to undertake the many tasks we are unable to perform within the limitations of the present AM service. The increased need for information programming will demand more flexibility in our AM service and cause us to review programming which perhaps should be moved to FM. At present our FM stations are operating experimentally as we consider the future. Several of the stations are shipping tapes to one another, which results in better sound quality for the listener than can be provided by landline. This may well prove to be the best overall delivery system for high-fidelity programming in stereo.

In the radio study referred to in our remarks on the AM networks it is possible to see an expanding role for FM emerging. The present rate of set sales should enable us to look at FM in much broader terms by the mid-Seventies. We see the need to develop our planning now for what could be a second essential network service on a much wider geographical basis than the present FM network has.

In other words, FM can be considered to be another potential delivery system for the task of network broadcasting. And, just as FM is an important element in our current radio study, so are a number of other new delivery systems, such as tape, cassettes, satellite, side-band, etc.

It is possible, therefore, to envisage the future in terms of several CBC radio services rather than merely in terms of a single live network in English and in French. But, regardless of the delivery systems employed, the task will remain as our mandate describes it. Without new delivery systems in the future we would be limited in meeting the requirements of the mandate in ways that will attract growing audiences. If it is possible to profit by these new systems as they become available, we are confident that the role and usefulness of CBC radio will expand in the years ahead.

The current schedule of our three-city FM network is attached as Appendix W. A breakdown of this schedule by program category is included in Appendix B.

V. THE LICENSING OF CBC NETWORKS

1. The Need for Flexibility

The early pages of this brief suggested the complexity of the Corporation's network situation. As pointed out there, the CBC has to think in terms of not five but a score of networks. For purposes of program scheduling, time-zone differences, affiliate liaison and microwave or landline traffic orders the Corporation must at various times deal with any or all of these on twenty-odd networks.

In fairness it must be said that the situation is not as complex as it sounds: television networks can be separated from radio, English from French. But in any one of these network groupings, English television or French radio or whatever, there are many variables to be considered in implementing a network schedule or applying a regulatory policy.

We have in mind here, of course, the fact that the Commission may see fit to apply conditions to the licences which it proposes to issue to CBC networks. While it is prepared to cooperate wholeheartedly to meet and, if possible, surpass conditions which the Commission may impose on its networks, the Corporation is anxious that such conditions should be as realistic as possible. By this we mean that they should recognize the realities of network program planning and scheduling with which the Corporation must contend in its day-to-day operations across Canada.

As one illustration of what we have in mind, we foresee the likelihood of an increased volume of regional television programming, involving regional networks of CBC-owned and affiliated stations, in the future. Any network licence conditions should, in our view, be such as to foster rather than hinder such a development. Another area in which problems could arise would be the application of quantitative content requirements to various network clusters.

What this suggests is that any network licence conditions should be as flexible as the achievement of their object will permit. This degree of flexibility - in effect, an accommodation of the licence condition to the realities of the particular CBC network situation - offers, we believe, the best chance of arriving at the goal shared by both the Commission and the Corporation: the improvement of the quality and variety of the service offered to the Canadian public.

2. The Mandate as a Condition of Licence

The CBC is new to the field of network licensing. It does not know what licence conditions the Commission has in mind or if, indeed, it has any. Whatever the case, it seems to the Corporation that the requirements imposed on the national broadcasting service by Section 2 of the Act - the mandate discussed at the beginning of our brief - constitute a very significant set of "licence conditions" for CBC networks and stations. They are basic conditions having the force of law and the Corporation must make every effort to meet them. It should, and does, expect its performance to be judged in relation to them.

VI. CONCLUSION

As we said at the beginning, the problems of selection in a brief covering such a wide field are formidable. Of necessity we have had to refer here or in our supporting material to many non-program matters and to matters in which our achievement has not been all that it should be or that we would like it to be. But, having said this, we want to declare our pride in the overall program achievement of the Corporation - in television and in radio, in French and in English. Despite their shortcomings we believe that our network services, taken as a whole, represent a substantial and important contribution to the life of Canada.

We assure the Commission of our cooperation in the networks licensing process upon which it is now engaged. We are prepared to discuss at the forthcoming hearing any of the matters touched on in this brief or any others the Commission may raise. In particular, we would wish to discuss in advance any conditions which the Commission may propose to attach to the licences it will be issuing for CBC networks.
